

The restaurants, eating establishments and brewpubs displayed here offer a wide variety of choices in cuisine, pricing and menu selection. Whatever type meal your taste buds crave, be it fine dining, ethnic, pub fare, or casual/family you'll find many of Utah's best on these pages. Many Utah restaurants prepare menus from home grown meat and/or organically grown produce. Although not well known as a leading producer of agricultural products, the state does have substantial beef, lamb, pork and poultry farms. The Cache Valley in northern Utah is a major producer of dairy products and fruit orchards bearing crops of cherries, peaches and raspberries are substantial. Utah State University in Logan (The Aggies) is one of the country's leading agriculture schools.

"But you can't get a drink in Utah"

Oh, yes you can! After years of hand wringing, arm twisting and massive angst, the Utah Legislature last year passed the most sweeping liquor reform legislation in four decades, including doing away with the state's one-of-a-kind, thoroughly quirky private club law. Utah liquor laws finally join the 20th (oops, 21st) century!

In addition, there are many craft micro-breweries in the state that are winning national awards for their beers and ales, and more are cropping up all the time. And fine wine? Castle Creek and Spanish Valley wineries are producing quality Cabernet Sauvignon, Merlot, Syrah and several fine whites and blends. The new Utah Kiler Grove grows grapes in their vineyard in Paso Robles, California and ships to Salt Lake for production of several varieties.
